Pinned | Changes To Our Community Features (Video Explainer)
Hello! As part of an ongoing quest to make things simpler, I have been making some changes to the Café (community) area of The Haven this week. The community has been relatively quiet recently, in part because of confusion about where, how, and what to post. So I've taken the plunge and made a radical shift in the approach we will take...

1. Post Privacy

You can choose whether you want to share your post with all members, only those you are connected with, or only you (maybe you want to make a note to yourself and consider sharing it with others later). Note that "Public" is not visible to those off the site - all activity feed posts are only visible to Haven members.

2. Title (optional)

You can give your post a title. This is not mandatory.

3. Share what's on your mind

There is no character limit to what you post. So whether you want to post a quick update or a long form blog-style post, you can do that here.

4. Formating, Member-Mentions, and Emojis

You can add formatting to your post with a range of options to make it visually compelling. You can also mention other members by using their @username and they will be informed you have included them. There are also a host of emojis you can add to your posts.

5. Attaching Photo, Video, Document, Gif

You can attach a photo, short video, document, or gif to your post. Photos will be saved in the Photos tab on your profile, and videos will be saved in the Videos tab on your profile.

6. Discard Draft

If you close the window before posting your update, you should find it waiting for you when you return. You can hit discard draft to remove it if you change your mind about posting it.

7. Post

Don't forget to hit the "Post" button!

Hashtags

Hashtags play an important role if you want to add your post to a community trend or if it shares a subject matter with other posts. For example, if you include #hsp at the end of a post about high sensitivity, it will come up alongside other posts with the same label for those searching.
